Long and short version

LONG VERSION:

"It's not where the wind comes from, but how I set the sails—that's what matters!" That's the guiding motto of our speaker today—round-the-world sailor Stefanie Voss.

How do you navigate confidently through stormy times? How do you stay on course when your destination is constantly changing? What is the foundation of success in an unpredictable world? How flexible and resilient must people and organizations be today?

Stefanie Voss has great answers to these pressing questions!

At age 16, she went to the U.S. as an exchange student; at 19, she moved to Paris for an internship; at 23, she relocated to Argentina for her employer; and at 25, she signed up on a sailing yacht to circumnavigate the globe as part of an international crew. By the age of 31, she had already become a department head at a DAX-listed company.

Since 2009, she is running her own business on an international level, delivering inspiring keynotes, providing business coaching and facilitating workshops and leadership development programs.

Her sailing experience, her business expertise, and her pragmatic, hands-on, and open-hearted nature are her hallmarks. As a sailor, she understands the challenges of both storms and calm; as a former corporate executive, she knows the ins and outs of international business. As a mother of two, she successfully juggles her children, clients, and career.

She encourages people to take firm control of the helm of their own lives—and to boldly set their own unique course!
